Abstract

[0093] Disclosed are systems and methods for backing up data files. In one embodiment, a method of backing up data files can include detecting changed locations in one or more data files, storing the contents of the changed locations at a storage time, and associating the stored contents with: the storage time, the changed locations, and one or more file identifiers identifying the one or more data files.